Synopsis and Policy Considerations:

The South King County Road Map Project is a collective initiative involving seven public school districts: Auburn, Federal Way, Highline, Kent, Renton, (South) Seattle, and Tukwila. Other partners include educational institutions from preschool to postsecondary, state and local government, community-based organizations, youth and families, employers and funders, and education advocates.

The initiative's goal is to have seventy percent of South Seattle and South King County students earn a college degree or career credential by 2030.

The Community Center for Educational Results (CCER) is the Road Map Projects "backbone" organization, a non-profit that staffs the initiative, providing data, research, communication, logistics and other supports for the initiative.

At the Board meeting, members will hear from two CCER staff on the work of CCER, including data about student transitions and student survey results.
